The following includes portions of Horizon Kinetics LLC's 1st Quarter 2019 Commentary related to TPL released by Horizon Kinetics LLC on April 25, 2019:

Some Updates on Portfolio Holdings

Texas Pacific Land Trust, a major – sometimes the major – holding in a number of our strategies, is now the subject of a proxy contest between the two trustees who control its activities and an investment group. A shareholder voting period will end with the Special Meeting that is scheduled to be held on May 22, 2019. The trustees have put forth a candidate to replace the late Maurice Meyer III, who retired in February due to ill health. The investment group has proposed a different person to be the third trustee. Both assert that their candidate would best serve the interests of the Trust.

Central to the proxy contest is that the Trust is as unique in its governance structure as it is in its asset inheritance. The assets are probably unmatched in the scope of their royalty interests, surface acreage and water rights in the oil and gas rich Permian basin of west Texas. The Permian Basin is unmatched in the U.S. for the extent of its reserves, now second in the world only to Saudi Arabia. It is no exaggeration to say that the Permian Basin has enhanced the global geo-political economic position of the U.S.

As to governance, there is probably no other SEC-registered, publicly traded company with trustees or directors who are tenured for life. One can see why it is especially strongly felt by both parties that the choice of this third trustee is most important.

In almost all such cases, the contesting parties are referred to as an outside investor group, and I have here chosen to exclude that term. This is because this particular group holds over 25% of the shares, is TPL's largest shareholder group by far, and has held the shares for many, many years. In this sense, they might be said to embody the ideal of a long-term equity stake holder, which is, in its essence, the counterpoint to an outsider. The trustees, in contrast, hold a negligible amount of shares.

These and many other informative facts are available as SEC filings made by both parties in recent days, and some of these have also been disseminated as news releases on financial news websites. An important fact that must be disclosed is that Horizon Kinetics is a member of the investor group. For obvious reasons, there is little in the way of persuasive language, or language that regulators might interpret as being of a promotional nature, that I should be or am permitted to say in this forum other than what has already been disseminated. Borrowing from those public sources, the following statements from each party might do justice to elements of each of their core messages, though each have much more to say:

From the Trustees:

TPL's Trustees and management have led the Trust through a period of expansive growth.....shareholders are benefitting from unparalleled returns.

As your current Trustees, we are proud of what we have delivered – including total shareholder returns of 733% since January 1, 2014. By comparison, the S&P 500 returned 74% during the same timeframe, while WTI crude oil prices decreased by 36%.

A response from the investor group:

We...hope that the two incumbent Trustees stop taking un-qualified credit for the returns experienced by TPL investors the past few years. For that, we believe proper credit is due to the numerous exploration and production companies that have spent over $10 billion since 2013 drilling on TPL's treasured royalties and land.... Being dealt a Royal Flush does not make one a good poker player.

Beyond these few excerpts, there is much more information now readily available through both parties' filings and announcements in this ongoing debate.
