Historically, a well-diversified investment portfolio, with exposure across the traditional asset classes of cash, stocks and bonds, has helped reduce investment risk. However, in today s volatile markets, an investor s portfolio may need additional diversification protection. One increasingly popular option is the addition of foreign currency exposure; and currency exchange traded products (ETPs) have offered a convenient way for investors to gain exposure to foreign currency.

But caveat emptor. Not all currency ETPs invest solely in the underlying currency and it s important to understand what you are buying. There are important differences associated with the structure of the currency ETP. Before making the leap, investors should educate themselves in order to see what type of currency ETP they are investing in.

¹ This table doesn t represent a list of each eligible holding and risk. ² In the event of default of the ETF issuer, this would be the resource available to shareholders for recourse. ³ According to IRS Revenue Ruling 2008-1, gains from currency ETNs are generally taxed as ordinary income, regardless of how long the shares are held by the investor. However, according to the prospectuses of some currency ETNs, investors might have an option to classify some gains as long-term capital gains under Section 988. See IndexUniverse, A Complete Guide to ETF Taxation, November 2011.

Rydex/SGI CurrencyShares[®] only invest in the underlying currency to gain pure exposure. By utilizing the grantor trust structure, CurrencyShares[®] allow investors to gain direct exposure to the currency.

CurrencyShares are subject to risks similar to those of stocks and may not be suitable for all investors. The value of the shares of each CurrencyShares Trust relates directly to the value of the foreign currency held by the particular Trust. This creates a concentration risk associated with fluctuations in the price of the applicable foreign currency. Accordingly, a decline in the price of that currency will have an adverse effect on the value of the shares of the particular CurrencyShares Trust. Factors that may have the effect of causing a decline in the price of a foreign currency include national debt levels and trade deficits, domestic and foreign interest rates, investment and trading activities of institutions and global or regional political, economic or financial events and situations. Investors should consider the investment objectives, risks, charges and expenses of these products carefully before investing. The prospectus pertaining to each product contains this and other information about the product. Please read the applicable prospectus, including the Risk Factors section, carefully before you invest. Shares can be bought and sold through a broker and the purchasers or sellers may have to pay brokerage commissions in connection with the transaction. Investment returns and principal value will fluctuate so that shares may be worth more or less than original cost. Shares may only be redeemed directly from the Trust by Authorized Participants via baskets (as defined in the prospectus). There can be no assurance that an active trading market for the shares will develop or be maintained. The CurrencyShares Trusts are not investment companies registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940.
