Why are we merging with First Citizens Bank of South Carolina (First Citizens Bank and Trust Company Inc.)?

As management has communicated in the State of the Bank strategic plan videos and elsewhere, in order to compete and be successful well into the future we must grow into a larger organization that operates more efficiently and effectively. Strategic mergers, executed with discipline and prudence, are an excellent way to achieve this.

We share with First Citizens of South Carolina a similar culture, values and business philosophies and a commitment to customers, so merging makes sense from those perspectives. Merging will enable us to leverage the existing teamwork between our two banks and capitalize on each other's particular strengths.

And of course, we believe merging will benefit our customers. We'll be more efficient, have greater capacity to serve a broader spectrum of businesses and individuals, and will be able to offer more convenience and value.

What is the timeframe for the merger?

Assuming shareholder and regulatory approvals, we're aiming to close the merger sometime in the fourth quarter and to complete technical conversion sometime during the first or second quarter of 2015.

What will be the names of our combined holding company and banking subsidiary?

The combined entities will retain our current (North Carolina) names: First Citizens BancShares, Inc. and First-Citizens Bank & Trust Company – more commonly known as First Citizens Bank.

Where will the merged company's headquarters be located?

Raleigh will be the headquarters location of the combined bank, and many of the corporate support functions and staff associates will be in Raleigh.

For a while, the merged bank will likely continue to operate some departments/functions in other locations.

Who will lead the company?

Frank Holding Jr. will serve as chairman and CEO of the merged corporation. Subject to board approval, members of management from both banks will comprise a combined leadership team. IRIS will report the team members when they are named.

What about branding and marketing? Which bank's will be used for the combined company?

The merged bank will eventually use the Forever First brand, advertising and marketing. No specific timetable has been established yet for the transition to the single brand and marketing platform.

Are the names and responsibilities of South Carolina's associate positions different than ours? Will our positions change?

Yes, there are position differences between the two banks, and we can expect changes after the merger. Management and Human Resources will determine and communicate what, how and exactly when positions may change.

How about things like our products and services, and our credit philosophies? How will differences be addressed? Will we eventually all sell the same things to the same types of prospects and customers?

These are issues that management will be evaluating for a while before any decisions and changes are made. A likely outcome may be a common collection of products and services with market-driven target and rate differences like we have today.

Now that merger plans have been announced, can our customers use First Citizens of South Carolina's branches, products and services?

For the most part, until systems conversion is completed – tentatively planned for early 2015 – customers should bank as they normally do at their existing branches.

Our customers can perform some transactions via First Citizens of South Carolina. For instance, they can use South Carolina's ATMs without paying a fee, and may cash checks or make deposits at South Carolina's branches in South Carolina. South Carolina's customers can cash checks or make deposits at our branches in North Carolina and use our ATMs across our footprint. Those conveniences have been in place for a while and have nothing to do with the announced merger.

What about stock? First Citizens of South Carolina's stock is privately held, and ours is publicly traded.

South Carolina's common stock will be exchanged for our stock after closing of the merger. Our Class A Common Stock will continue to be publicly traded on NASDAQ and our Class B Common Stock will continue to trade in the over-the-counter market and be quoted on the OTC Bulletin Board.
