NEWS RELEASE FROM HARMONY

22 November 2004

Gold Fields' management's strategy is in disarray

Harmony notes that Gold Fields has conceded that some of its own shareholders have reservations about and consequently are likely to reject management's proposed IAMGold transaction. Predictably, this confirmation has been accompanied by Gold Fields circulating alternative strategies which Harmony believes appear to have both major issues of implementation and the potential to be even more value-destructive than the proposed IAMGold transaction.

Harmony believes that an outright disposal of Gold Fields' international assets for cash would be contrary to the Gold Fields' board's long stated strategy of diversification and growth, would reduce shareholders exposure to gold, swapping ounces for cash, and, in a fire-sale atmosphere, could ultimately be significantly value-destructive.

Furthermore, Gold Fields has suggested that cash raised could be used to buy back Norilsk's shares. In the absence of a competing offer for the whole of Gold Fields, shareholders should be aware that such a buy back is precluded by the irrevocable undertaking between Harmony and Norilsk during the Harmony offer.

Under the terms of the Securities Regulation Panel Code, either of these proposals would constitute frustrating action and would therefore require the approval of shareholders in general meeting.

Harmony believes that this speculation is being allowed to circulate by a board who are resorting to a strategy which appears to be in disarray and has little merit or substance.

Harmony wishes to ensure that what it believes to be desperate tactics do not distract you from the real and certain value proposition inherent within Harmony's proposal to create the world's largest gold mining company. Harmony believes that its proposed merger also offers a full and fair, upfront premium, as well as the opportunity to benefit from real and sustainable operational cost savings. Harmony reminds Gold Fields shareholders that shares tendered under the early settlement offer will still receive the full benefit of any increase in consideration.

Harmony advises you to accept the early settlement offer, the only actual proposal on the table, as soon as possible.
