The following communication was posted to Halliburton Company's website related to the pending acquisition of Baker Hughes.

Update to the main Integration page:

We are excited to share news of a historic step by our company to advance the depth and breadth of our capabilities to better serve our customers. Halliburton's pending acquisition of Baker Hughes is a natural combination from a customer service and financial perspective. This pending acquisition would combine product and service capabilities to allow us to build upon the innovative leadership of both companies. As previously communicated in March, Halliburton and Baker Hughes each obtained the required approvals from their respective stockholders for the proposed acquisition to proceed. However, the actual close of the transaction is expected to occur late in the second half of 2015, and remains subject to regulatory approvals and other customary closing conditions.

Halliburton and Baker Hughes are in the midst of planning the integration of the two companies across our product lines, regions of operation, and functional support areas. Throughout this process, enthusiasm for the project has been high from the employees of both companies.

At the core of the integration planning process is a focus on customer service, safety, operational excellence and financial synergies as we work towards building a stronger company and creating a seamless transition for employees, customers, suppliers, and stakeholders.

We are committed to providing insight into our progress on the pending acquisition with updates to this website as appropriate, including regarding what may change and what is expected to stay the same. We are confident that the combined company will be a stronger and more diverse organization with the resources to better serve our valued customers well into the future.

FAQs:

Why is Halliburton acquiring Baker Hughes?

We believe the transaction will combine product and service capabilities to deliver a greater depth and breadth of solutions to our customers and exciting growth opportunities for our employees and shareholders. As a result, we expect the combination to result in substantial and improved growth opportunities and continued high returns on capital.

The combined company will be able to provide a comprehensive suite of products and services to customers in virtually every oil and natural gas producing market in the world with the ability to provide cost-effective solutions to customer challenges in the unconventional, deepwater and mature asset sectors.

Where are we in the process of planning for the integration of Halliburton and Baker Hughes?

Halliburton's integration team has held high-level discussions and exchanged general information with its Baker Hughes counterparts and has now transitioned into the planning phase of the integration. Please understand that we are unable to share further details with the public or our customers at this time. We are working diligently to ensure a smooth transition for our employees, customers and other stakeholders once the deal is finalized.

What are the benefits of the transaction for customers?

We are confident that the combined company will be a stronger, more global and diverse organization with the scale and resources to better serve our valued customers.

The combined company will also have the ability to continue to commit appropriate levels of investment in the technologies required to support more efficient development of oil and gas assets around the world.

Finally, we believe the combined company will allow us to achieve synergies that lead to greater innovation and superior, cost-effective service for our customers.

What are your customers saying about this pending transaction?

The pending Halliburton and Baker Hughes transaction is a natural combination, both from a customer service and financial perspective. Customer feedback has been largely positive. Halliburton and Baker Hughes have worked separately to address any issues customers have raised.

Will there be any change to customer contracts with Halliburton?

At this time, there are no changes to customer contracts with Halliburton.

Will there be any change in the products and services I receive from Halliburton?

Prior to the close of the deal, we remain committed to providing the same reliable service and innovative products that you have come to expect from Halliburton. We are excited about the future possibilities for synergies and innovation that our pending acquisition of Baker Hughes will bring.

If a customer has business with both Halliburton and Baker Hughes, how will this affect the services, products and solutions they receive from Halliburton while the acquisition is pending?

Halliburton and Baker Hughes remain competitors prior to the close of the deal, and customers should not expect any changes in our services to them.

Why is Halliburton marketing for sale its Fixed Cutter and Roller Cone Drill Bits, its Directional Drilling and its Logging-While-Drilling (LWD)/Measurement-While-Drilling (MWD) businesses?

As anticipated, Halliburton will be required to divest some of its overlapping businesses to obtain competition authorities' approval of the pending acquisition of Baker Hughes.

When will the divestitures take place?

It may take some time to find the right fit for these valuable businesses. As the goal is for the divested businesses to remain competitive, we want to ensure they are sold to buyers who will run them as such.

The eventual close of the divestitures is expected to coincide with the closing of our pending acquisition of Baker Hughes late in the second half of 2015.

Who can I contact with additional questions?

Due to the sensitivity of this transaction, we are unable to answer many detailed questions at this time. We appreciate our customers and will continue to provide updates on a quarterly basis as we move through this process. In the meantime, if you have any questions or concerns please do not hesitate to reach out to your regular Halliburton contact or BHI-Integration@halliburton.com
