Pershing Square Capital Management, L.P. and certain affiliates ( Pershing Square ) posted a video entitled Bill Ackman on CNBC with Jim Cramer, October 4, 2017 to its YouTube page relating to Automatic Data Processing, Inc. (the Company ) and to www.ADPascending.com. A transcript of the video is below:

Mad Money with Jim Cramer

Interview with Bill Ackman

CNBC October 4, 2017

JIM CRAMER

Roughly six weeks ago, we sat down with Carlos Rodriguez he s the CEO of Automatic Data Processing to talk about his contentious proxy fight with Pershing Square Capital Management and its leader, Bill Ackman. Pershing Square released a rigorous 168-page presentation took me a full day to read, my wife was not happy outlining ADP s shortcomings, but I liked it. And he laid out a plan to turn things around. ADP attempted to shoot them down and fired back with a 69-page presentation of its own that had a lot of good facts. The whole dispute has gotten a little bit vitriolic and personal, and it s likely to come to a head in a month from now at ADP s annual shareholder meeting. So I thought that maybe we could notch it down a bit, just deal with a few more of the fundamentals and, since we already heard from Carlos Rodriguez, I wanted to check in with Bill Ackman he s the famous activist who runs Pershing Square hear his side of the story, hear about some of his other major holdings, too, if we get a chance and, of course, the questions he s putting to the company. Mr. Ackman, welcome to Mad Money. Good to see you, sir.

BILL ACKMAN

Thank you, Jim.

- MR. CRAMER           OK, Bill. We have a long relation, I know that what you try to do is make things be as substantive as possible, and you have been issuing a question a week, basically, to ADP. And I'd like you to start the new one on Mad Money.
- MR. ACKMAN           OK. So our new question for ADP is, why is it that ADP has lower revenue productivity than all of their competitors? So ADP has an average of, generates about $160,000 revenue per employee, the competitors average $224,000. Very straightforward question, and when you think about ADP, it has enormous scale versus the competitors. So if anything, they should have more efficiency.
- MR. CRAMER           Now, there was an issue back and forth where you were saying that the expenses have overrun the revenues. They've come back and said, well, that's not really a great [or] necessarily true comparison, but obviously, you wouldn't ask this question unless you'd done further
- MR. ACKMAN           You know, look, the reality is, if you look over the last six years, Paychex has you actually had the CEO of Paychex on yesterday, and you asked him the question. You said, Why is it that your margins are higher than ADP? And he said, Look, we're very careful about expenses. We use technology very effectively. And these are the things that we'd like to see ADP doing.
- MR. CRAMER           Just to give people a sense, because I know Paychex: they very quickly went to mobile. Marty Mucci runs the tightest ship in the world. You think that a lot of what Mucci does can be applied, even though Automatic Data is large business and Marty is small to medium.

- MR. ACKMAN      Actually, to be clear, ADP is 25% of ADP competes directly with Paychex. Same size customer. So what we said to ADP and, actually, I heard you ask this question: Paychex has 41% margins, pre-tax profit margins, in their business, but they're largely an SMB company (small and medium-size businesses). ADP's SMB segment is, if it had the same margins as Paychex, it would mean the rest of their margins were 12%, and that makes no sense. So clearly, there's a big opportunity.
- MR. CRAMER      Now, one of the things that I was looking at on Twitter - I posted that you were coming on - a couple of people asked a question, which is, "Hey, ADP's done well. Why go after ADP? They've beaten the S&P. Why doesn't Bill go after some companies that he went after historically and really - Canadian Pacific - and really turned that company around?"
- MR. ACKMAN      It's all about the opportunity for improvement. So we think ADP is a great company, it's done well over a long period of time, but it has massively underachieved its potential. It's about its potential. And one of the ways you can see that is, ADP spun off a company called CDK. I don't know if you've followed it personally.
- MR. CRAMER      No, no! We recommended it because we knew once it was on its own, it would have kind of a laser-like approach to its business.
- MR. ACKMAN      So that's what we need. ADP needs to pretend it's a spinoff. You look at CDK when it was owned by ADP. They said, look, we can get maybe 50 basis points, a half a percent of margin, each year in the business. Once it was spun off, same management team, different board of directors, took out a blank sheet of paper and said, how do we run this business more effectively? They've taken margins up 70% in the last three years. The stock's up more than 100%.

- MR. CRAMER           It's been a very big win and they did a great job.
- MR. ACKMAN           Why shouldn't ADP shareholders have that same opportunity?
- MR. CRAMER           All right, now, let me ask you. I've been following very closely this Procter & Gamble situation, and one of the things that they've been testing is, well, the board, how's Nelson Peltz done versus the current board of directors in terms of performance? You know, I looked at how some of the people, Mr. Unruh, has done. The companies that he's joined in the time that he's been on the board of directors have not outperformed ADP. Should we care about that?
- MR. ACKMAN           No. I think the comparison here is, how is ADP's performance relative to the competitive set? If you look at ADP's total shareholder return on the last six years compared to its competitors, underperformed by about 20%. You don't compare the airline industry - airline stocks have done well - you don't compare how they've done versus the S&P. You compare them against other airline stocks. Same thing's true with ADP.
- MR. CRAMER           I felt that way about the Procter, but I thought that they were making that point and bring that up. Now, there's a question about the percentage shareholder. You said you are an 8.3% shareholder, and we know from other situations you've used instruments, like a lot of people, to say that you're 8.3, which is true. That's the actual amount. But do you really in reality make yourself a 2% shareholder? Did you not want to spend the additional $2 billion or is it irrelevant?

MR. ACKMAN            Yeah. So the answer is we're the third-largest investor in the company by dollars spent. We've got a $2.3 billion investment in the company, and we own almost 9 million shares of stock in the company, and so our interests are very much aligned with the other owners of the company. One of the points, actually, we make about the current board, one of the benefits our board brings to the table: look at all the directors on the board. Our candidates, who haven't even joined the board yet, have spent more money to buy ADP common stock for themselves than the entire board has spent in the last 14 years.

MR. CRAMER            I think that's very important. I know

MR. ACKMAN            So I think shareholder ownership is valuable. With a $2.3 billion investment, and, by the way, I don't take directors' fees, so we waive them on behalf of Pershing Square. So I'm going to be dollar-for-dollar aligned with the other investors in the company.

MR. CRAMER            Let's back up for a second. You're being what I like: clinical, rigorous, which I know you are. There's no rancor, and I like that, too, because we've all got to notch things down.

MR. ACKMAN Sure.

MR. CRAMER How does it get rancorous? Is it the advisors? I mean, one of the things that Carlos said to me was, why did you wait until August 1 to first contact? Why be so quick to launch a proxy contest? I know that Nelson Peltz spent a long time with Procter to try to get them convinced, and DuPont, and that was another way to do it. Was that a decision that did breed some rancor? Do you regret it?

MR. ACKMAN No. I mean, actually, you look at Nelson Peltz. He spent six months talking to Procter & Gamble, had multiple meetings, and they're still having, I would say, a much more hostile battle than we're having at ADP.

MR. CRAMER And that's true, I'll confirm that. That's true.

MR. ACKMAN And part of that is, I think the advisors who advise companies on defending themselves from activists, they say, look, you don't want to show that you're even open to what they have in mind. Because if you do, then a lot of new people are going to come into the stock, a lot of more event-driven investors, and they're going to make it inevitable you're going to lose a proxy contest. So part of this, I think, is more tactics. You know, I met Carlos, he seems like a nice guy, don't know him well. Our private dialogue was all cordial, but when he went on TV, he, you know, he behaved otherwise.

MR. CRAMER OK.

MR. ACKMAN Since then, now, again, we haven't heard from Carlos in a long time. The company clearly seems to have dialed down the temperature. I think shareholders really all they care about is, is there an enormous opportunity to improve this company? Can adding a major shareholder to the board increase that probability? And I think the answer that we're hearing is yes.

MR. CRAMER OK. I know that we're here mostly to talk about Automatic Data, but a company that I've liked for a very long time, been a back [unintelligible], Chipotle, I feel has lost its way, could use someone like you to step in. Any sense that it can bottom, that the things they're doing now are right?

MR. ACKMAN Yes, and let's take a look at what happened there. You know we bought a stake in Chipotle about, you know, it's almost a year, actually.

MR. CRAMER Right.

MR. ACKMAN But within a relatively short period of time after meeting with the management of the company and meeting with some

MR. CRAMER Good guys!

MR. ACKMAN very good guys, they said, You know what? We think you guys can help. They gave us two seats on the board. They put on a couple of new directors that brought relevant experience in addition to our directors. A few directors stepped off. So there's been a complete turnover in the board. They had a co-CEO situation, which is often dysfunctional.

MR. CRAMER Right.

MR. ACKMAN They fixed that. They brought in a chief restaurant operator. This is a company that had an amazing concept, great food, but wasn't as disciplined operationally, perhaps, just not best in class. And some of those issues affected the company, obviously, [which is] probably partly why they had a food safety issue. So we think they're adding key people in all the key areas.

MR. CRAMER It takes some time for people to forget.

MR. ACKMAN It takes some time. We do think they're on their way to recovery, they got a little bit unlucky with a sick employee in one store.

MR. CRAMER Right. Exactly.

MR. ACKMAN But look at what they're doing now versus, you know, historically, there was almost no menu innovation. They've announced Queso. By the way, it is excellent. OK!

MR. CRAMER Okay.

MR. ACKMAN And I like the product. Two, they're going to have margaritas. They're going to launch dessert.

MR. CRAMER I'll be so in favor of that. No, this matters!

MR. ACKMAN These don't sound like innovations, right? But again, the company was a little bit you know, one of the points we make about ADP is sometimes when a company gets far ahead, it becomes complacent and complacency is the death knell for a business. That's true for Chipotle. Chipotle is no longer complacent. When your stock goes from 750 to 300, the CEO becomes extremely motivated. You're going to see menu innovation. You're going to see technology innovation. They were slow in terms of introducing technology. That's changing. They're going to have a best-in-class mobile app. They hired an executive from Starbucks.

MR. CRAMER I know. A very good executive.

MR. ACKMAN So I think they have the right people. They've got a great concept and they'll recover from this.

MR. CRAMER I want to ask you one that, and I don't mean it to be personal, but

MR. ACKMAN Please.

MR. CRAMER Joe Papa

MR. ACKMAN Yes.

MR. CRAMER was a good friend of the show from Perrigo. I think he's come and done some remarkable things for the balance sheet, and I know you left that situation, but aren't you impressed with Joe attacking that balance sheet to give him breathing room to turn this company around?

MR. ACKMAN Yeah, I'm a big fan of Joe Papa. You know, we stepped into Valeant after the stock collapsed. We were not on the board and, unfortunately, we should have been and, again, this was a lesson to us. You asked me, why did we want to join the board of ADP? My experience from Valeant is, we want to be on the board when companies are making major decisions.

MR. CRAMER Right.

MR. ACKMAN Joe is, I think, doing an excellent job.

MR. CRAMER Good. I'm glad to hear you say that.

MR. ACKMAN There is no CEO I've met that is more grace-under-pressure than this guy.

MR. CRAMER I'm so glad you said that.

MR. ACKMAN He's excellent.

MR. CRAMER Right.

MR. ACKMAN He's doing a superb job. He started with a tough hand, and you know the only reason why we sold Valeant was, we were spending an enormous amount of time on something that was a 2% position.

MR. CRAMER Right, right. It gets you, right.

MR. ACKMAN Since we joined the board of the company there was an 80% turnover in the board. I was able to help recruit Joe Papa, great CFO Paul Herendeen, right?

MR. CRAMER Yes, really strong.

MR. ACKMAN From Zoetis done an excellent job.

MR. CRAMER Really strong, Zoetis. I actually talked about it, I was unhappy with Zoetis to lose him, but that was absolutely a great call. But I mean, you helped Zoetis tremendously.

MR. ACKMAN Zoetis was another success of ours. I think if you look at what we were able to accomplish in 12 months at Valeant, we got the company to a place where it was stable, the company made some progress paying down debt, and I think Joe's going to do an excellent job.

MR. CRAMER OK. Last question and I'm going home, but that's OK, because I don't get to have you on. My friend Scott Wapner I know he's writing a very good book, but, and he's talking to you we're thinking it's a golden age of activism, and that that's not bad.

MR. ACKMAN No. I mean, I think if you take the perspective and I know you have a lot of individual investors who follow your show a lot of boards, you look at a history of a company and again, I'm a little bit focused on ADP, but I apologize

MR. CRAMER Of course!

MR. ACKMAN when the founder is around and in the boardroom, you've got a major shareholder there, companies don't lose their way. It's typically after the founder steps off the board retires, passes away, many examples you can think of this and the board becomes more professionalized. There's no one in the boardroom that owns a lot of stock in the company and they get a little complacent. And I think what activism is about is putting major shareholders on boards of directors. So even though the founder is gone, there's someone there watching the store. You know, it's a bit like the restaurant. When the owner is in the back, OK, you have a lot more confidence, OK, than when the owner has sold out.

MR. CRAMER

Oh, yeah! I could not agree more! That is Bill Ackman, the founder and CEO of Pershing Square, with some great points that he made about Automatic Data, about being a good shareholder, and also Chipotle, which is a stock that you know we're really pulling for. Mad Money is back after the break.

BECKY QUICK Let's get down to the New York Stock Exchange. Jim Cramer joins us right now, and Jim we've been running some bits from Bill Ackman on your show last night. What did you think about his take on ADP. Do you buy in? Is he right?

JIM CRAMER I think that they are so dominant that they did become complacent. I think they are trying very quickly to become less complacent, but I think that Ackman made a lot of good arguments. He was very rigorous. It was thank heavens not at all ad hominem. So I think he made an impression. The problem is that the total shareholder return, depending upon how you measure it, isn't that bad. I mean, now, the way that Ackman wants to measure it, a lot of the spike he thinks a lot of the spike is him, and there is truth to that. But I've got to tell you Becky, in order to be able to beat these guys, you are going to have to have more on them than just how much you are making per employee. But I've got to tell you, when I listen to Ackman, and I do my own work away from it, Automatic Data got fat and happy. And that's not good. You have got to get more digital. They're not. I don't think they're just losing out to Paychex. They should have been Workday, and they should have been ServiceNow, and they just missed out [on] those big opportunities.

MS. QUICK Jim, I hope we hear a lot more about it on Squawk On The Street. That's coming up in just a few minutes.

MR. CRAMER

Thank you.

MS. QUICK

Ok. Thank you. Tomorrow on Squawk Box, don't miss an extended interview, by the way, with activist investor Nelson Peltz. That is at 7:30 a.m., Eastern Time. We'll be right back.

SCOTT WAPNER Do you want to open on that one?

JIM CRAMER Well I don't know.

MR. WAPNER I don't know.

MR. CRAMER Look, we weren't talking about Josh Norman, so what does it matter?

MR. WAPNER We are in a bye week, so I'm not allowed to talk about football.

MR. CRAMER Yeah, that's true. That's why you're here.

MR. WAPNER Yeah. Exactly. I would normally be in meetings all day.

MR. CRAMER He's a Redskin fan. I'm an Eagles fan. There's a heavy overlap between what we do and people who watch football, including tired-night football.

MR. WAPNER That's right.

MR. CRAMER Which will be the Patriots.

MR. WAPNER It may be better tonight.

MR. CRAMER Right.

MR. WAPNER Alright. Pershing Square's Bill Ackman ramping up his push for changes at ADP and the proxy fight with that company. Here is Jim with Ackman last night on Mad Money.

MR. CRAMER [Previously Recorded Video]

I know that what you try to do is make things be as substantive as possible, and you have been issuing a question a week, basically, to ADP, and I'd like you to ask, start the new one on Mad Money.

BILL ACKMAN [Previously Recorded Video]

OK. So our new question for ADP is, why is it that ADP has lower revenue productivity than all of their competitors? So ADP has an average of, generates about $160,000 revenue per employee, the competitors average $224,000. Very straightforward question, and when you think about ADP, it has enormous scale versus the competitors. So if anything, they should have more efficiency. [Cut to Later Point in Video] It's all about the opportunity for improvement. So we think ADP is a great company, it's done well over a long period of time, but it has massively underachieved its potential.

MR. WAPNER Alright. So you couldn't get him to take the coat off and roll the sleeves up?

MR. CRAMER No, kinder, gentler. No, this was good. No ad hominem as opposed to the CEO of Automatic Data who, when interviewed with David Faber, really said some kind of ad hominem stuff.

MR. WAPNER Right, he said he was acting like a spoiled brat.

- MR. CRAMER Right. That got away from this notion. He didn't want to talk about the August 1 versus the tennis match. The inner workings of what brought him here. But he raised interesting questions about productivity versus Paychex. Now, Marty Mucci, the CEO of Paychex had been on Mad Money the night before.
- MR. WAPNER Right.
- MR. CRAMER And Bill was referencing that interview and why they have such higher margins, and he said that that's because they are more computerized. I would point out, and I would have gone a little further than Bill, [that] two of my favorite companies are ServiceNow and Workday, and they are chipping away at where I thought Automatic Data should be now if it weren't complacent. They should have been automating a lot of the back-office functions, HR. They should have been doing that. They should have been automating the onboarding of when you get a phone call from outside, and how to check in new people. Workday and ServiceNow are remarkable cloud-based companies and Automatic Data is late to that.
- MR. WAPNER So are you these are your words? Are you saying that they are too complacent? You agree with Ackman?
- MR. CRAMER I agree with him, but in a different way. I would have actually gone harder than Bill. Bill's really looking at some matrix that are true, which is that they're, you know. Automatic Data would say that they're high-touch and they need that. Automatic Data though.
- MR. WAPNER Right, and that's why their margins are lower.

MR. CRAMER Right. But at one point and there's a difference between the TSR, they did a spinoff, Automatic Data. It was a very good spinoff. If you decide just to sell that spinoff and take in some dividends, the rate of return isn't that good. Ackman's talking about the rate of return before, the day before Rodriguez got named. Here's the problem: Automatic Data is a good stock. It's just a good stock.

MR. WAPNER I know. It makes the case harder to make. I mean, if you look at

MR. CRAMER Right! Thank you.

MR. WAPNER 5, 10, 20 years versus the S&P, it's beaten not only the S&P and Paychex itself.

MR. CRAMER But this was a subdued, it's a subdued Ackman, but I would say rigorous. Look, there was the Valeant problem, Chipotle hasn't worked out. But the man is very rigorous and does quality work. I think he argues a good point. I think that Automatic Data has been complacent. I think that this has lit a fire under them and will probably help them, but the fact is that many of the points that he makes in this new, totally devoid of any sort of fire Ackman, are right. I think he deserves a board seat. I think he could help the company.

MR. WAPNER Alright, interesting. We'll see how this whole thing He says shareholders are going to say yes, or they are saying yes.

MR. CRAMER Well, I think Bill raises good points.

MR. WAPNER They are a very heavily retail-owned stock.

- MR. CRAMER            I think it has massively underachieved, but what I'm saying, [is] it should have been cloud-based. It should never have let Sloatman from ServiceNow take over a portion, they should have     and Aneel Bhusri, he came in and took a portion. If those guys decided they wanted to go payroll, then Automatic Data is very vulnerable. But that's not Bill's view. That's my own view because I'm closer to those companies.
- MR. WAPNER            Alright. Up next, it is Cramer's Mad Dash as we count down to the opening bell. Let's take a look at futures once more. Looks like a positive open on Wall Street yet again. There it is. S&P, Dow, NASDAQ all poised to open higher. More Squawk on the Street from the NYSE is straight ahead.

Fast Money

CNBC October 4, 2017

MELISSA LEE Welcome back to Fast Money. Moments ago, our own Jim Cramer sat down with activist investor Bill Ackman. They talked a bit about Ackman's battle with software service provider ADP. Here's a little taste.

BILL ACKMAN [Previously Recorded Video]

I think the advisors who advise companies on defending themselves from activists, they say, look, you don't want to show that you're even open to what they have in mind. Because if you do, then a lot of new people are going to come into the stock, a lot more event-driven investors, and they're going to make it inevitable you're going to lose a proxy contest. [Cut to Later Point in Video] Now, again, we haven't heard from Carlos in a long time. The company clearly seems to have dialed down the temperature. I think shareholders really all they care about is, is there an enormous opportunity to improve this company? Can adding a major shareholder to the board increase that probability? And I think the answer that we are hearing is yes.

MS. LEE Let's bring in Jim Cramer for more on this. Hey, Jim, and this has really been a bruising battle between ADP and Bill Ackman.

JIM CRAMER Gotta tell you, Melissa, I think he dialed it back. I think that the Bill Ackman that I saw on the show was about the rigor, the plan how to get the fundamentals moving but cordial, welcoming. A good dialogue with Automatic Data. This was it wasn't subdued, it was just matter of fact.

And may be that's what's needed at this point for the people who watch us at home to figure out who to really vote for versus escalating rhetoric that really does confuse the picture.

MS. LEE Yeah, it really does. And when he had been talking to Scott Wapner, I think a month ago or three weeks ago or so, he made it seem like he was really going after that retail investor. Maybe this presentation appeals more to them. To the people at home, as you said.

MR. CRAMER Totally agree. Mad Money's got a great retail base, like you guys. What I would say is that the people who watch at home, who are not involved in the thick of these battles, they don't like ad hominem attacks. They kind of want to figure, well, geez, would this be better for the stock? Would my stock go up? And when they see people who are just confronting, and would confront other companies with facts, I think they say, you know what? This guy's got his act together. Maybe this is good.

MS. LEE Yeah. You guys also talked about Chipotle, which has been a losing wager for Bill Ackman. He tasted the Queso, he said it was good. [Laughter] I don't know, but what does he think of his position right now?

MR. CRAMER I think he's trying to wait out the last bit of bad news. I do think, by the way, I'm with him with the idea the stock's trying to bottom. But my problem is, and I mentioned it to him, I said, America's got maybe it doesn't have a long-term memory, but they have a short-term memory for some of the bad things that they saw. I think it's a longer slog than he does. He's pretty optimistic.

MS. LEE All right. Great stuff, Jim. Thank you so much for joining us.

MR. CRAMER Thank you, guys! Dan Nathan likes the QQQ?

MS. LEE Do you like the QQQ?

DAN NATHAN Stick around for the final call, Jim!

MR. CRAMER All right, all right! I m septical [sic].

MS. LEE [Laughter] All right! Jim, thanks. Jim Cramer!

MR. CRAMER Thank you, guys.

MS. LEE For the full interview, do not miss Mad Money tonight, 6:00 p.m., Eastern Time.

JIM CRAMER

No rhetoric, no ad hominem attacks, just facts from Bill Ackman. I tell you, gotta tell you, I thought it was pretty cogent. Made some very good, very good points. I'd like to say there's always a bull market somewhere. I promise I'll try to find it just for you, right here on Mad Money. I'm Jim Cramer and I will see you tomorrow.
