Edgar Filing: L3 TECHNOLOGIES, INC. - Form 425

Filed by: Harris Corporation Commission File No. 1-3863 Pursuant to Rule 425 under the Securities Act of 1933 and deemed filed pursuant to Rule 14a-12 under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 Subject Company: L3 Technologies, Inc. Commission File No. 1-37975 DATE: April 1, 2019 TO: All Harris Employees SUBJECT: Integration Management Office Update #5 Innovating to Stay Ahead My last integration update focused on establishing an innovation powerhouse, and I wanted to build on that theme in this update. I have participated in numerous industry/DoD events in the past month, plus several engagements on the Hill, and the dominant theme across our industry remains the rapid reshaping of customers' needs. Near-peer adversaries like Russia and China are challenging U.S. technical superiority in the battlespace, and the DoD is looking for ways to stay ahead of this challenge with superior and faster-to-market mission solutions. The multi-domain battlespace demands technologies that are seamlessly interconnected and interoperable. This is not the future – this is now. It is no longer feasible to offer our customers a single product that does a single job. The land, sea, airborne, space and cyber assets of every mission must be purposed from design to deployment to function seamlessly together – using open systems and upgradeable software-defined solutions. Our leadership in the areas of spectrum superiority, actionable intelligence, warfighter effectiveness and safe air travel position us well to provide end-to-end solutions to our customers. This requirement for mission solutions means that the L3Harris of the future needs to itself be inter-connected and interoperable. The ability to seamlessly operate as a unified L3Harris enterprise will accelerate technology innovation so we can invent, build and support multi- domain, scalable solutions for our government and commercial customers. We will build on our strengths with a cohesive and focused operating model. This will include: Focus on innovation: L3Harris will be a company differentiated by innovation. I am confident that the technical talent for this is already in place. Our job as leaders will be to unlock our full potential as L3Harris and make it possible for our engineering talent to think big and interact with each other to turn ideas into solutions. In both companies, some mechanisms already exist – technology roadmaps, idea call events and strong cultures of bottom-up innovation – but we know more is needed. Making the big leaps in innovation that our customers are looking for will require enterprise coordination and an innovation mind-set – not just in engineering but in everything we do.

Informed and fast decision-making: After close, we will put in place decision-making structures that remove friction from development processes without sacrificing engineering rigor and the quality standards that warfighters, aviators, public safety officers and others depend on. We must break down silos and facilitate cross-pollination of ideas and capabilities, so that good ideas move seamlessly through the enterprise. This agile mindset is crucial to our long-term success. Speed to market: The DoD has made it clear that its current acquisition processes are not ideal for all but the largest and most complex investment projects. Our customers urgently need to get technology to the warfighter faster. L3Harris must be able to deliver iterative technological advances into the field faster, with a ready-to-deploy approach using commercial software development techniques and non-traditional manufacturing approaches like additive manufacturing. This means having robust metrics to measure cycle time and our performance against best-in-industry. We need L3Harris to build the muscle for rapidly scaling solutions that are effective, while running short-cycle and long-cycle development side-by-side. Prioritizing R&D: Research and development budgets need to be invested with a unified company strategy in mind. This will require us to look across the company and prioritize investments that align with our strategy and use mechanisms like the CheckPoint review process to calibrate progress. Leveraging talent and ideas: A flatter, interconnected operating structure will facilitate the movement of talent and ideas quickly so that we allocate resources to where our customers need them most, and where the business opportunities are greatest. A unified operating system also has benefits for employees who will be able to build rewarding careers and expand skills as they advance vertically and laterally across the enterprise. None of this can happen in a day, but we must start from Day 1. We have a tremendous opportunity to be our customers' first choice for mission solutions that protect our nation and keep us ahead of our adversaries.
